The Oak

The Oak room is on the ground floor to the left of the front door. As it seats 25 people comfortably at tables and is equipped with 25 plug sockets it is an ideal venue for all training and conferences but specifically computer training.

It is a well ventilated room with 3 large windows for natural light and has universal access.

The Library

The Library is a beautifully decorated room suitable for small groups or counselling sessions. It has its own staircase and is away from the rest of the house. This makes it a very discreet space for support groups or one to one sessions.

The Rose Room

The Rose Room is on the third floor of the house with views facing out towards the front of the house. It is an ideal room for holistic treatments as it is very cosy and has room for a plinth and a massage chair etc.

The Elm Room

The Elm Room is the largest room available and seats 30 people. It is the room just right of reception. The Elm room is bright and airy and was originally the dining room. It is wheelchair accessible and ideal for training and conferences.

The History of Kiltalown House

Kiltalown means "Church of the Elms" and it received its name from an old church in the town land existing until the 17th century.

In 1800 John Carpenter, the then owner of the land, demolished it completely and on the old foundations built a house in Queen Anne's style called "Kiltalown House". The house and lands were only owned by four people over the years, James Robinson, Joseph T. Pratt, John Robinson and W. Jolley.

The Jolley family was the last dynasty to inhabit the house and in 1987 the Family gave the house and the remaining land to Dublin County Council.

The intervention of Dublin County Council to save Kiltalown House has been a great asset to the whole community who avail of its facilities.

On lease from Dublin County Council from 1987 to 2005, Kiltalown was used as a community and creativity centre. Negotiations between Tallaght Rehabilitation Project and South Dublin County Council yielded positive results and Tallaght Rehabilitation Project moved from the attic in St. Thomas Church to its new home at Kiltalown House on the 18th July 2005.

Kiltalown House and gardens are ideal surroundings for the specialist therapeutic work that is provided at TRP.

Kiltalown has some fine architectural features. The portico has a pair of Doric columns and full entablature, and the doorway has a carved timber surround with fanlight. Kiltalown has a hipped slate roof and extensions and barns / outbuildings at the side - to the rear of the house.

Archaeological Findings

A part of the Pale, the medieval ditch that surrounded Norman Dublin was discovered in the grounds of Kiltalown House. It was an extensive archaeological find and was recorded and validated by the Office of Public Works in February 1996.

An Ancient Urn and the fragment of a larger one were found in the town land of Kiltalown in 1848 and are now in the National Museum of Ireland.
